

Design the Right Home Around You

By Dwight Miller, PhD, CPE

Imagine owning a home that supports your lifestyle, values, personality, and spirituality. Imagine feeling wonderful about your home every time you wake up, walk into it, or curl up with a good book. Imagine having a living room that is the perfect size and has just the right amount of visibility and access to the great outdoors. Research indicates that we all interact with our surroundings in diverse ways. My holistic technique answers questions such as:

- What are the sources of discomfort in my current home?
- What is my emotional relationship with my home?
- How dedicated am I to green, sustainable design?
- Where do I land on the size/quality tradeoff continuum?
- Should my home be more socially or privately oriented?

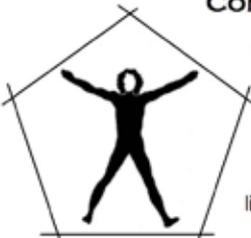

Whether starting from scratch or remodeling, the largest investment of your life needs to start with who you are and incur minimal risk. My innovative method is based on scientific findings in the fields of architectural, environmental, and design psychology. Our sessions will discover where you stand on 38 dimensions of home relationship, determine your style preferences, assess your needs for green and healthy materials, and identify the most appropriate designers/builders for your project. Ultimately, we will create a detailed “architectural program” that communicates your unique design requirements to the architect, designer, or builder of your choice. You can also use the program to design your own home. Regardless, this comprehensive approach ensures that you get the “right home” that supports your life.

Dr. Miller holds a PhD from The Ohio State University. While a Distinguished Member of the Technical Staff at Sandia Labs, he taught several courses in the School of Architecture and Planning at UNM. He is also a Certified Professional Ergonomist and consults with architects, planners, and lawyers on how people interact with the built environment.
